Doct.r Currie's Rules for the Cold Affusion in Fever.

The safest & most advantageous time for the affusion of cold water is when the Exacerbation is at its height or immediately after its declination is begun, therefore most commonly from Six to Nine in the Evening, but to be used at any time, when there is no sense of chilliness present, when the heat of the surface is steadily above what is natural & when there is no general or profuse sensible perspiration. These particulars are of the utmost importance.

Cautions

The presence of severe Diarrhoea or Dysentery seems to forbid the use of the cold affusion — Not to be used when the Extremities feel cold whatever may be the heat of the Central parts

The Term tepid applied to that degree of heat which is warm but not hot viz from 87. to 97 of Fahr.t
By the term cool is meant the temperature from 87. to 75.

Cold water not to be given as drink in the cold stage of Fever, but to be drunk with freedom when the hot stage is formed, then dry & burning It may be drunk in the beginning of the sweating stage though more sparingly — After the sensible perspiration has become general & profuse the use of cold drink is strictly to be forbidden — who came with a great Fleet, and defeated them entirely after a bloody battle

957 Edgar kept up a Fleet far superior to his Predecessors & more powerful than all the other European Princes but together, Authors differ as to the number, the lowest being three thousand six hundred the highest four thousand eight hundred he divided the Fleet into three one of which he station on the east, another on the West & the other on the North coast of the Kingdom, Every year after Easter he sailed round the Kingdom and effectually asserted his Sovereignty over the Sea 978 In the Reign of Ethelred the maritime strength of the Nation was so far sunk that seven Ships plundered 981 Southampton, and the Nation was obliged to pay Tribute (Danegeld) to bribe the Danes not to plunder & burn the coast
